

WHAT'S HAPPENING

SEPTEMBER

22 Pew International Journalism Program, "Emerging Infectious Diseases and Bioterror," Donald Burke, Johns Hopkins University Bloomberg School of Public Health. 2:30-4 p.m., Rome 812, 202.663.7761.

22 SAIS Faculty Book Series, "Environment and Statecraft," discussion of book by Scott Barrett, director of the SAIS Energy, Environment, Science and Technology Program. 5:30-7 p.m., Rome Auditorium, 202.663.5790.

22-23 Center for Transatlantic Relations, "Competing Visions of Europe and America," two-day conference. 2-5 p.m. (9/22) and 9-3 p.m. (9/23), Kenney Auditorium, 202.663.5880.

24 International Development Program, "Democracy and Development: Must They Always Go Hand-In-Hand?" Marina Ottaway, SAIS adjunct professor of African Studies. 12:30-1:30 p.m., Rome 806, 202.663.5929.

29 Pew International Journalism Program, "Children of War," Dennis Hunt, Center for Multicultural Human Services. 2:30-4 p.m., Rome 812, 202.663.7761.

OCTOBER

1 International Development Program, "Focusing on Youth as a Development Strategy: Success Stories in India and Beyond," Mark Engman, Christian Children's Fund. 12:30-1:30 p.m., Rome 806, 202.663.5929.

3 Career Services, "International Security Career Fair," open to alumni and current students. 1:30-4:30 p.m., Kenney Auditorium, 202.663.7797.

8 International Development Program, "The Commercialization of Microfinance: The Case of Institutional Transformation in Uganda," Victoria White, ACCION International. 12:30-1:30 p.m., Rome 806, 202.663.5929.

14 Foreign Policy Institute, "Senator Mansfield: The Extraordinary Life of a Great American Statesman and Diplomat," discussion of book by Donald Oberdorfer, SAIS journalist-in-residence. Other panelists include columnist Mark Shields. 5:30-7 p.m., Kenney Auditorium, 202.663.5772.

15 International Development Program and Latin American Studies Program, "Why Is Haiti Poor? Poverty and Possible Exits," Jerome La Pittus, former IMF representative in Haiti. 12:30-1:30 p.m., Nitze 517, 202.663.5929.

15 Conflict Management Program, "International Waters Challenge—Moving From Conflict to Cooperation: The Nile Basin Initiative," Christina Leb, World Bank. 12:30-2 p.m., Rome 535, 202.663.5745.

22 International Development Program, "Building Bridges in the Fight Against Poverty: Private Businesses Work Towards Development Goals," David Browning, TechnoServe. 12:30-1:30 p.m., Rome 806, 202.663.5929.

23 Center for International Business and Public Policy, "Corporate Governance Lecture Series," Henry Kaufman, former Salomon Brothers partner and chief economist. 11 a.m.-noon, Kenney Auditorium, 202.663.7787.

29 International Development Program, "The Impact of AIDS on Educational Progress in Africa," Joseph Davis, American Federation of Teachers. 12:30-1:30 p.m., Rome 806, 202.663.5929.

30 Office of Development and Alumni Relations, "Reception to Honor Johns Hopkins President and Mrs. William R. Brody," hosted by Sir David Manning B'72, British ambassador to the United States, 6-7:30 p.m., Ambassador's Residence, 3100 Massachusetts Ave., N.W. ($25 for JHU Alumni Association members, $35 for non-members), 800.548.5481.

Please note that this schedule is subject to change. For the most up-to-date calendar of events, refer to the SAIS Web site at www.sais-jhu.edu.

Dean Jessica Einhorn leads Senator Edward Kennedy into a standing-room-only Kenney Auditorium on July 15 when he returned to SAIS to speak about the long-term role of the United States in securing the peace in post-war Iraq. Last September Kennedy spoke at the school, where he outlined his objections to a possible war with Iraq.

WASHINGTON
SAIS reports
BOLDFONTS

1740 Massachusetts Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20036-1983

SEPTEMBER/OCTOBER 2003

FIRST CLASS

U.S. Postage

PAID

Southern Maryland

Permit No. 4820

Nonprofit Org.

U.S. Postage

PAID

Southern Maryland

Permit No. 4820

Inside

- Mohrman Heads Hopkins-Nanjing Center's D.C. Office
- Hopkins-Nanjing Center Moves Classes to Honolulu as SARS Precaution
- Rembold Named Associate Dean for Development
- Summer Internship Fund Assists 87 SAIS Students in 2003
- Alumni and Development News
- Calendar

A Conversation With Kent Calder,
Director of Japan and Korea Studies

Kent Calder has been named Edwin O. Reischauer Professor of East Asian Studies and director of Japan and Korea Studies at SAIS. He also has assumed the position of director of the Edwin O. Reischauer Center for East Asian Studies.

Calder comes to SAIS this fall from Princeton University, where he taught for 20 years—from 1983 to 2003. He was on the faculty of Harvard University from 1979 to 1983. He also served as Japan Chair at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, as well as special adviser to the U.S. Ambassador to Japan, and to the assistant secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs.

He is author of Pacific Defense, Strategic Capitalism and Crisis and Compensation and co-author of The Eastasia Edge. Calder received his Ph.D. in government from Harvard University.

“SAIS is enormously enriched by the addition of Professor Calder to our faculty,” said Dean Jessica Einhorn. “It is impressive to see not only his past record of achievement but the energy and insight that he brings to defining a new era in Japan and Korea Studies at the school. We look forward with great confidence and enthusiasm to his leadership in this vital area of our program.”

Q: What attracted you to SAIS?

A: The quality of colleagues was one big consideration. I feel that SAIS has the finest modern Asian Studies faculty in the world. Neither Princeton nor Harvard, for example, is strong in Southeast Asian politics, while SAIS is outstanding. SAIS's offerings on China, South Asia and Central Asia are also excellent, and we have an extraordinary group of resident professionals and visiting scholars on Korea.

Location was a second factor. Massachusetts Avenue is becoming the premier “policy shop” in the world, with the Brookings Institution, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Institute for International Economics, the Center for Defense Information and others nearby. SAIS is right in the middle and the only true academic institution. Michael Porter of Harvard Business School talks of how “competitive clusters”—Silicon Valley, Madison Avenue, and so on—become themselves formidably competitive in global terms, and that is happening on Massachusetts Avenue. I want to be part of that in an academic capacity, and SAIS is a great way to do it.

Q: What is your vision for the Japan and Korea Studies Program, and what are some important trends in this field of study, especially in light of the heightened focus on U.S.-Korea relations?

A: First, I think of Japan Studies and Korea Studies as separate programs, both of which I happen to head, rather than one entity. Each country has its own way of looking at the world and its own sensitivities, which are good reasons for the separation. We are starting a new Korea Initiative that we hope will ultimately lead to a Center for Korean Studies at SAIS.

One trend common to both Japan and Korea Studies is an increasing sense of the importance of comparison. I have just completed a major Japan-Korea comparative piece on “The Politics of Economic Reform,” and would like to see more work of this kind. There is also a growing interest, both academically and in policy terms, in Northeast Asian economic and political integration, which also interests me, especially compared to the evolution of regionalism in Europe, Latin America and Southeast Asia. We plan to start a “Japan-Korea Comparative Politics Seminar” and a “North-east Asian Political Economy Seminar,” both extracurricular, to provide opportunities to discuss and analyze these issues. Following resolution of the current North Korean nuclear crisis, regional integration could rapidly accelerate in Northeast Asia, and the world needs to understand emerging trends. We at SAIS want to be in the forefront of that analysis.

Kent Calder

Q: What is your vision for the Reischauer Center?

A: The Reischauer Center is close to my heart, since I was one of the last Ph.D. students of former Ambassador Edwin O. Reischauer, after whom the center is named. I then taught with him at Harvard just before his retirement, and served as executive director of Harvard's U.S.-Japan Program while he was director. I am honored to be following George Packard, Reischauer's special assistant at the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo, as director of the Reischauer Center here at SAIS, and very pleased that Professor Nathaniel Thayer, Reischauer's press attaché in Tokyo, continues to serve as senior adviser to the center.

I see the Reischauer Center as a catalyst for research on U.S.-Japan relations, a place to develop concrete

(continued on page 2)

RECONSTRUCTING IRAQ

On July 31, SAIS and Newsweek co-hosted a forum, “Iraq: Perspectives on Post-War Reconstruction,” featuring (from left) panelists Lt. Gen. Jared Bates (Ret. U.S. Army), former director of operations and chief of staff of the Office of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Assistance for post-war Iraq (ORHA), Robert Hunter, former U.S. Ambassador to NATO, and Lt. Gen. Jay Garner (Ret. U.S. Army), former ORHA director.

Mohrman Heads Hopkins-Nanjing Center D.C. Office

SAIS has named Kathryn Mohrman, former president of Colorado College, as the new executive director of the Washington Program Office of the Hopkins-Nanjing Center for Chinese and American Studies.

As the Washington, D.C.-based executive director, Mohrman, who assumed the position July 15, is responsible for overall development and management of the program's operations.

"Our program in Nanjing has moved from strength to strength under able direction in Washington and Nanjing and with great support from the host universities of Johns Hopkins and Nanjing," said SAIS Dean Jessica Einhorn. "Kathryn Mohrman brings impressive experience and high prestige to the position of executive director at a time of great challenge and opportunity."

Prior to joining the Hopkins-Nanjing Center, Mohrman spent the 2002-03 academic year as a Fulbright Professor in the Department of Government and Public Administration at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. In addition, she served as director of research and development of the Hong Kong-America Center. She currently is a member of the board of directors of the National Committee on United States-China Relations.

Having nearly 30 years of distinguished service in the higher education field, Mohrman was president of Colorado College in Colorado Springs from 1993 to 2002 and dean for Undergraduate Studies at the University of Maryland at College Park from 1988 to 1993. Other experience includes serving as associate dean of the undergraduate college at Brown University, director of national affairs at the Association of American Colleges and guest scholar at the Brookings Institution. She has taught public policy courses at several U.S. and Asian universities.

"I am honored to join the Hopkins-SAIS community," said Mohrman. "The Hopkins-Nanjing Center has an exciting future, and I am delighted to be a part of it. A new building is scheduled to be completed in 2006, the 20th anniversary of the center; it will double the physical space of the center, provide a state-of-the-art auditorium and create a new library. In addition, faculty and administrators are discussing academic enhancements, growing from the strengths of one of the oldest and most prestigious educational programs in China."

Kathryn Mohrman

A native of Illinois, Mohrman received her Ph.D. in public policy from The George Washington University in 1982, an M.A. in American history from the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1969 and a B.A. in history from Grinnell College in Grinnell, Iowa, in 1967. In 2002, she received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Colorado College. Other honors and professional activities include receiving a Fulbright Fellowship to Japan and Korea in 1992 and serving on the Henry Luce Foundation's Asian Studies Advisory Committee from 2000 to 2002. ● policy proposals for strengthening that relationship and to work on broader issues, such as energy security and regional economic integration. We already produce a widely read handbook of U.S.-Japan relations and provide student internships in Japan. I would like to add an increasingly dynamic research component that capitalizes on our tremendous location and network.

Kent Calder

(continued from page 1)

Q: What areas of expertise do you bring to SAIS, and what courses are you teaching?

A: I consider myself a comparativist rather than an area studies specialist. Before beginning to study Japan and Korea 30 years ago, I spent three years in Africa and three in Southeast Asia. I lived in Japan 11 years, including nearly five as special adviser to the U.S. ambassador there, and traveled frequently to Korea.

My academic work has focused on the politics of Japanese economic policy formation—especially how politics shapes fiscal policy and government lending. I have also written extensively on Northeast Asian security—particularly on energy security and the political-economic evolution of the Korean Peninsula. I am teaching courses this term on Japanese politics and public policy, as well as a security studies course on "Base Politics: How Host Nations Respond to Foreign Military Presence."

Q: Is there any personal information you'd like to share?

A: Apart from my research, and apart from travel, which I love, I am getting increasingly interested in antique collecting, cycling, canoeing, and design—and Washington seems like a great place for all these pursuits. I am also beginning to study the Korean language; probably because I already speak and read Japanese, Korean seems less difficult than I had feared. ●

Hopkins-Nanjing Fall Semester Shifts to Hawaii

As a precautionary measure against severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS), the Hopkins-Nanjing Center opened on schedule on September 5 at a temporary location in Hawaii.

Fall semester classes are being taught at the East-West Center in Honolulu, rather than in Nanjing, where since 1986 JHU and Nanjing University have administered the center's program. The center's Chinese students and faculty have joined their American and other country colleagues and roommates in Hawaii for the next four months. Forty-two Chinese and 36 non-Chinese students have enrolled in the program for the 2003-04 academic year.

The two universities ended the center's spring 2003 semester in Nanjing on April 22 as a precaution against SARS. The decision to hold fall semester classes in the United States recognized that it was impossible to know in advance what the SARS situation in China would be this fall. Both Johns Hopkins and Nanjing University were determined that the center's programs not be interrupted by the SARS epidemic.

"The Hopkins-Nanjing Center is open for business this fall. The decision we made with Nanjing University is indicative of the strength of our partnership and the depth of our commitment to the future leaders of the U.S.-China relationship," said Jessica Einhorn, dean of SAIS.

SAIS expects the center to resume operations in Nanjing in spring 2004.

"By moving the center to the United States for one semester, we demonstrate that SARS will not disrupt the marquee program in U.S.-China educational relations. We are grateful to The Asia Foundation and Daniel Koo, chairman of Shui Hing (HK) Limited, for assisting us during this extraordinary time," said JHU President William R. Brody.

VOLUME 8, NUMBER 1
WWW.SAIS-JHU.EDU

SAIS Reports is published bimonthly from September through May by the office of SAIS Public Affairs.

Director of Public Affairs: Felisa Neuringer Klubes

Contributing Editor: Sharon Congdon

Contributing Writer: Martin Tillman

Photographers: Ray Crowell
Kaveh Sardari

Design & Production: AURAS Design
Silver Spring, MD

Articles and news information are welcome and should be addressed to the Editor, 1740 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036-1983. SAIS Reports reserves the right to edit any material submitted.

©2003 by The Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies.
All rights reserved.

Printed in the United States of America

Rembold Named Associate Dean for Development

Scott Rembold became SAIS's new associate dean for development on July 1. As chief development officer, Rembold assumes the leadership of the school's current capital campaign, with an initial goal of $45 million.

Rembold, who served as the school's director of development since April 2002, is credited with significantly expanding the level of unrestricted support SAIS receives. He replaces Barbara Wiesel, who retired from the position in June after two years of service.

Coming to SAIS from The George Washington University, Rembold was director of development for the Graduate School of Education and Human Development, overseeing major gift fundraising for the school for three years. From 1996 to 1999, he was GWU's director of development for annual programs. Prior to his tenure at GWU, he served as director of annual giving at Arizona State University.

Other professional experience includes nearly five years with The Pacific Group, a Los Angeles-based university advancement consulting firm, where Rembold held the positions of director of sales and marketing and associate vice president for consulting services.

Scott Rembold

A native of Baltimore, Rembold received a bachelor's degree in political science from Wake Forest University and a master's in education with a concentration in higher education administration from GWU.

In his new position, Rembold manages a comprehensive outreach and fundraising program designed to further SAIS's relationship with corporations and foundations. He is also charged with strengthening relations with more than 10,000 graduates and other donors to the school worldwide. ●

Students Benefit From Summer Internship Fund

No matter how challenging and rewarding their academic coursework, SAIS students—like graduate students everywhere—are eager to test their skills in the field. And each year, the school's Summer Internship Fund offers students the opportunity to gain a unique perspective on the culture and politics of various organizations through unpaid internships.

With assistance from the fund, Maggie Barker, a second-year student in the International Development Program, was able to serve as an unpaid intern with the West Africa Research Center in Senegal this past summer. "Living in West Africa opened my eyes to the diversity of the continent," she noted. "I had spent significant time in South Africa, and was curious to check out West Africa before making a professional commitment to living and working in Africa. I found that the history, culture and economy of Senegal are quite different from South Africa's."

Internships are an essential aspect of the school's broad commitment to provide students with dynamic career development opportunities, according to Martin Tillman, SAIS's associate director of Career Services. "Internships can be important career-related experiences; they help develop a professional network of contacts and can lead to full-time employment after graduation."

Career Services serves as a clearinghouse for an array of internships and manages the Summer Internship Fund. From 1997 to 2003, the fund disbursed more than $370,000 to support 451 summer interns through both the General Fund and Alumni Fellowships.

As a result of his internship this summer with Development Finance International in Washington, D.C., Josh Hurwitz said that he encountered "a knowledgeable and trusted mentor, himself a SAIS alum, who has willingly shared much of his insight and experience." Hurwitz, a second-year student in the Latin American Studies Program, added that the internship helped him focus more clearly on his own career path: "I learned that development consulting is a field best left to those who have already worked in one of the development banks and who have a sizable Rolodex of contacts. I am now more interested in private financial institutions as potential employers."

Given the tight job market, internships have assumed added importance for students seeking to identify future job prospects.

Katie Donohoe, a second-year student in the International Development Program, who interned with USAID in Guinea this summer, said she gained "a much better understanding of how USAID and other major donors operate in the field, and how NGOs and other organizations interact with donors. I also learned what career opportunities exist—and how careers with donors such as USAID differ from jobs at NGOs and other contractors."

This award season was highly successful, according to Tillman, with a sizable increase in the number of awards and the amount of funds available to SAIS students in Washington, Bologna and Nanjing. In summer 2003, 87 awards were made—a 20 percent increase above 2002. Funds disbursed increased 12 percent over last year, from $64,450 to $72,350. ●

DEVELOPMENT AND ALUMNI RELATIONS NEWS

Dean Appoints New SAIS Advisory Council Members

SAIS welcomes Alan Fleischmann '89, vice president at Penn, Schoen and Berland, David Fuhrman '82, partner at Western Medical, and Robert Silberman '91, chairman and CEO of Strayer Education, Inc., to the SAIS Advisory Council. The new members were appointed by Dean Jessica Einhorn. The council will convene at the school on October 27 and May 4 in the coming academic year.

Gretchen Osgood Awarded JHU Heritage Award

Gretchen Osgood has received the Johns Hopkins University Heritage Award for her generous support of the school both during and after the tenure of her late husband, Robert Osgood, as dean of SAIS. The Heritage Award honors alumni and friends who have contributed outstanding service to the progress of the university over an extended period. Mrs. Osgood established the Robert E. Osgood Memorial Fellowship for students studying American foreign policy. In 1989, the SAIS Academic Board established the Robert E. Osgood Chair in American Foreign Policy and appointed Zbigniew Brzezinski as the first Osgood Professor, a position he continues to hold. A graduate of the Johns Hopkins School of Nursing, Mrs. Osgood culminated her long career as deputy director of the Division of Nursing with the U.S. Public Health Service.

Corporation and Foundation Support

The GE Foundation has provided key support for a research project in the new South Asia Program. "South Asia in the World: A Multidisciplinary Policy Resource" will provide much-needed insight into the role of India's regional governments in international affairs. The Sunrise Foundation of Bethesda, Md., has made a two-year commitment to support a full-tuition fellowship for a student from the Middle East.

Thank You

Thanks to the 1,500 alumni and friends who contributed to the SAIS Annual Fund this fiscal year. Private gifts are critically important in helping SAIS to attract and retain the finest faculty, to provide excellent students with financial aid and to pay for facilities and technology improvements.

Alumni Endowments Support Internships

This summer, 20 students received more than $16,000 awarded from nine Endowed Alumni Fellowship funds:

- Lane & Elizabeth Blumenfeld Fund—public interest and public sector
- Vivi & Milton Jay Davidson Fund—Asia
- Frederick & Nancy Dutton Fund—public and private sectors
- Grayce Kerr Fund—environment
- Robert Kleeb, Jr., Fund—private sector
- William Kuhn Fund—Central Asia
- William Nitze Fund—public & private sectors
- Morris Offit Fund—Asia
- D. Eric Pettigrew Fund—any sector